

Friday, November 22, 2019

CHI GUIDE

The Chicago Brunch Hit List

These are the best new brunches in Chicago.

Brunch is the best reason to put on pants on weekend mornings, and luckily Chicago is full of great options. But sometimes your go-to spots can start to feel a little tired. Sometimes you want to try something new (besides Kanela Breakfast Club's 67th location). With that in mind, we give you the Brunch Hit List, a guide to excellent new brunch spots. All the places on this list are less than a year old, or have recently started serving brunch - and as with our regular Hit List, we've been to all of them and can say for sure that they're worth your time.

© SANDY NOTO

Cira

$$$$ | Mediterranean in West Loop

7.3_{/10}

Cira is another restaurant in The Hoxton, and from an atmosphere perspective, it feels a lot like Cabra's cousin who graduated from law school. This place is ideal for a business brunch or any kind of situation involving parents or people with five-year plans. The food here is Mediterranean-inspired and meant to be shared, and you can get a $25 prix-fixe (with options like banana bread and a potato frittata) or order dishes like shakshuka and a falafel benedict a la cart.